TELECOM ITALIA AWARDS MARCONI EUR15 MILLION

FRAME CONTRACT FOR NEXT-GENERATION NETWORK

London, January 7th, 2003 - Telecom Italia has awarded Marconi (MONI) a new, two-year frame contract worth EUR15 million to install a national optical backbone network in Italy based on Marconi's next-generation, high capacity optical cross connect (MSH2K). The equipment, part of Marconi's new Series 4 SDH (synchronous digital hierarchy) portfolio, was launched in mid September 2002.

Following completion of the project, Telecom Italia will have available a next-generation network, characterized by high standards of network protection and traffic re-routing in the case of signal failures, across which the operator will be able to provide new, innovative services to its customers.

The new equipment has been developed by Marconi at its laboratories in Genoa and is manufactured in Marcianise, both in Italy. The platform has been designed to fit well with the new requirements of telecommunication operators. The implementation of this infrastructure will provide Telecom Italia with a flexible and cost-effective evolution towards integrated optical networks, with fast restoration capabilities based on the GMPLS protocol (Generalized Multi Protocol Label Switching).
