The following was made available to SouthTrust and Wachovia employees

Wachovia Business Unit Overview

As you know, we have recently completed thorough business unit reviews as part of the merger integration planning process. The decision has been made that after the merger is consummated, SouthTrust will migrate to Wachovia's organizational structure.

To help you understand the Wachovia business units and how they work, below are high-level strategy and structure overviews for all the major divisions at Wachovia as they are today.

Keep in mind that in some cases, the Merger Project Office is still working with businesses to make decisions about the final organizational structure and staffing needs following completion of the proposed merger. In addition, all areas are working on finalizing selection processes. Look for a broad, high-level timeline of selection processes in the coming weeks. Because these timeframes will vary based on the needs of individual business units and departments, business unit leaders will communicate all of the specific details about how the process will work for your business unit at the appropriate time.

Wachovia's General Bank Group

The General Banking Group (GBG) is headed by Ben Jenkins.

Upon merger consummation, the General Bank will be divided into a Northern Banking Group and a Southern Banking Group. The Northern Banking Group, based in Charlotte, will include the Carolinas (North Carolina and South Carolina), Mid-Atlantic (Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C.), Atlantic (Connecticut, New Jersey and New York) and PennDel (Pennsylvania and Delaware) Banking Groups. Reggie Davis, currently CEO of the Atlantic region, will lead it. The Southern Banking Group, based in Atlanta, will include the Alabama, Mississippi, Northwest Florida and Tennessee Banking Group, the Florida Banking Group, the Georgia Banking Group and the Texas Banking Group. Tom Coley, who is currently SouthTrust vice chairman, will lead it.

The current organization includes 2,500 financial centers from Connecticut to Florida on the East Coast with expansion efforts underway in Texas. Upon merger consummation, it will also include new banking markets in Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee. The General Bank is headquartered in Charlotte and currently employs roughly 38,000 people. Last year, it accounted for 48 percent of the company's revenue.

The General Bank includes the following core businesses:

- Retail banking
- Commercial banking
- Business banking
- Community banking
- Dealer Financial Services
- Real Estate Financial Services
- Retail Credit Products and Businesses (includes Wachovia Mortgage Corp.)
- General Bank Products and Finance
- Wachovia Direct contact centers (one of which will be in Birmingham after the proposed merger closes.)
- Service Excellence
- Distribution

The division currently serves nearly 10 million customers nationwide.

Wachovia's General Bank employs a matrix organization structure with business segment responsibility for strategy development and regional/line responsibility for geographic leadership and execution.

The region-based leaders are responsible for service and sales execution across all lines of business throughout the geographic markets. These leaders are focused on taking care of customers, growing the business, leading the sales process and managing employee talent. More specifically, the Regional President, who reports to the State CEO, drives overall performance for the region.

The business unit/segment leaders provide a centralized, consistent approach to business planning, develop and drive strategies, and set goals and budgets across the entire geography. These leaders also support the line leaders in meeting their aggressive business goals, and ensuring consistent execution.

Various staff units support these two groups through a dotted line reporting structure to the General Bank.

Wachovia General Bank Line of Business Models and Key Differences

Given the broad scope of the General Bank and for the purposes of today's communication, the following are highlights of some of its business segment models, which may in some cases represent key differences from current SouthTrust business models.

Retail Banking

The Retail Bank organization, led by Cece Sutton, provides strategic oversight of retail and small business sales and service, customer strategies and retail operations for the banking regions. The Retail Bank serves nearly nine million customers and contributes more than 35 percent of the company's annual earnings.

Highlights of the Business Model:

Focused and consistent strategies – retaining customers, deepening customer relationships and acquiring new customers – help to drive strong balance sheet and revenue growth.

Separation of sales and service enables salespeople more time to sell and service bankers more time to spend resolving customer issues or answering questions.

Customer segmentation is used to develop strategies and tactics to reach target segments, which helps increase customer acquisition and leads to greater revenue growth. Key segments include Affluent, Upper Mass/Lower Affluent, Small Business and Hispanic.

Dedicated support for sales management and in-depth reporting of sales activities and results help drive consistency of execution and performance across the geography.

Compensation is a mixture of fixed and variable pay and based on sales productivity, service measurement and growth of book of business. Pay for performance serves as positive motivator for greater sales productivity.

Business Banking

Business Banking, led by David Pope, offers a full range of financial services for businesses with $3 million-$15 million in annual revenues, including competitive checking and treasury services products. A broad product array is offered including conventional and SBA loans, leasing, lines of credit, 401(k) services, insurance services, online banking, as well as services to meet the personal financial needs of the business owner and employees. Business Banking also includes Small Business Capital and Business Leasing.

Highlights of the Business Model:

Focused client strategies such as retention, cross-sell and acquisition drive greater deposit, loan and treasury services production, which leads to revenue growth.

Business Banking Relationship Managers carry 150-175 client relationships, but are supported by a deal team of partners, which helps to leverage the sales skills of the RM and partner expertise in credit, treasury services, retail banking and investments. Relationship Specialists support RMs by working daily with customers on service needs.

Production goals are aligned with strategies and tracked through measurement and reporting processes.

Compensation is production based with qualitative and quantitative measures considered. Qualitative measures are tied to key focus areas such as service quality, sales practice execution and other key company initiatives such as the Wachovia Client Partnership

Community Banking

The Community Banking segment, led by Bill Holt, focuses on mid-size markets by establishing local leaders who are empowered to holistically support and leverage local opportunities. A generalist banker model helps to serve the market across all traditional customer segments. The Market President, who reports geographically to the regional leaders, is responsible for financial performance of the local market (both wholesale and retail) and Community Banker sales production.

Highlights of the Business Model:

Community Bankers have aggressive production goals focused on the market opportunities.

Upon completion of a recent pilot, credit underwriting will be done locally in order to expedite the loan process for customers. Compensation is tied to growth of the entire market, production and asset quality as well as qualitative components.

Commercial Banking

Commercial Banking, led by Carlos Evans, provides business customers with $15 million-$250 million in annual revenues a full-range of banking services, including treasury management, corporate and investment banking, international banking, traditional bank credit, insurance services, trust services and 401(k) solutions. This segment utilizes a generalist approach with the exception of two specialized businesses: Government Banking (serving state and local governments, institutions of higher learning and charitable organizations) and Not-for-profit Healthcare Banking (serving major healthcare organizations). These businesses report directly to the segment head.

Highlights of the Business Model:

Loan origination/selling is accomplished through Relationship Managers who work a defined geographic market and manage approximately 60 client relationships.

Underwriting is done collaboratively and is led by credit partners. Decisions are made locally up to a certain size and then are forwarded centrally for further approval.

Local servicing is handled by the RM, Relationship Specialist, Credit Officer and additional support personnel, which allows the RM to focus on new business development.

Focus is on building collaborative relationships with internal partners such as Corporate Investment Bank, Brokerage, Retirement Services and Wealth Management to leverage their expertise and deliver a broad array of services to client.

Compensation is based on strong quantitative components, as well as a subjective qualitative element, which can enhance pay-for-performance. It also is tied to the success of the segment and portfolio growth.

Dealer Financial Services

Dealer Financial Services, led by David Stevens, is a 60-year-old business that offers automobile dealers a full-range of financial services through one point of contact including treasury management, indirect retail financing, 401(k), money management, commercial real estate financing, floor planning, credit and deposit services, personal wealth and investment management. The DFS Specialized Lending Group also provides financing solutions for RV and marine purchases and refinances.

Highlights of the Business Model:

Sales force is managed by a DFS Sales Executive, but with a strong dotted line to the regional geographic leadership. The Sales Executive has six State Directors responsible for managing, directing and coaching 45 Relationship Managers and 23 Relationship Specialists throughout the geography.

RMs are supported by Relationship Specialists and by the Dealer Credit Manager working with their group. RMs leverage partnerships with Treasury Services, Corporate and Investment Bank, Business Leasing, Wealth Management and Retirement Services, which helps to deepen relationships and better meet all customer needs.

The Retail/Indirect Auto program is a major driver in ability to penetrate all other areas of the dealer relationship. Heavy Truck business expands expertise, increases customer acquisition and helps drive additional revenue.

Real Estate Financial Services

Real Estate Financial Services, which will be led by Glenn Eubanks following the completion of the proposed merger, serves real estate clients across the company's geographic footprint and through additional offices in Illinois, Massachusetts, Colorado, Arizona and Southern California. It offers a broad array of financial solutions for clients such as construction and permanent financing, capital markets and investment banking products and services, treasury services, wealth management and brokerage. Real Estate Financial Services clients include both private and public commercial developers and residential homebuilders that specialize in the following property types: industrial, office, retail, homebuilding, land development, multi-family and condominiums.

Highlights of the Business Model:

Focus on deepening customers relationships by cross-selling expanded product line and acquiring new customers through more robust sales effort. Leverage opportunity to increase deposit and capital markets penetration throughout client base.
National expansion into select markets builds geographic collateral diversification, client diversification and perpetuates brand.
Segregation of client management and credit underwriting allows for more focus on sales activities.
Evolution of the Risk Management underwriting/portfolio management model to enhance customer responsiveness and employee job satisfaction.
Development and implementation of strategic mezzanine debt and private equity investment capabilities to selectively complement client management goals.
Creation of a Specialty Real Estate position that would include oversight of the funds and healthcare client segments.

Wachovia's Risk Management

Risk Management is headed by Don Truslow, chief risk officer.

Risk Management division defines and oversees Wachovia's capacity and appetite for credit, operational, compliance and market risk. Its primary functions are accomplished through line-of-business risk groups (General Bank, Corporate and Investment Bank, and Capital Management Group/Wealth Management Group) and enterprise risk functions (Credit Risk Management, Market Risk Management, Treasury Services Risk Management, Compliance Risk Management and Operational Risk Management). While the Wachovia strategy and business model apply, Wachovia and SouthTrust have similar risk management philosophies.

The General Bank Risk Management team, following completion of the proposed merger, will include wholesale credit risk management, consumer risk management and real estate financial services (REFS) risk management. Following completion of the proposed merger, and as the Wachovia business model is deployed, integrated risk teams will be formed throughout the existing Wachovia footprint and in the Texas and Alabama markets. REFS also will establish appropriate support for additional national expansion (i.e. Phoenix and Denver) and specialty lending areas (i.e. mezzanine debt and/or healthcare).

In REFS Risk Management, the recommended credit model is one currently in pilot at three Wachovia sites. This model merges two risk management roles into a single Credit Manager role responsible for underwriting and servicing, which will enhance customer responsiveness and employee job satisfaction.

The General Bank wholesale credit risk management group supports four primary segments: commercial, business banking, community banking and retail small business. Within Wachovia's wholesale model, the Relationship Manager has responsibility for developing client relationships and coordinating the sale of all of the bank's products and services. Credit underwriting, approval, servicing and portfolio management are functions performed by risk management.

The wholesale risk model utilizes both a centralized underwriting approval and servicing group as well as decentralized state-based credit risk teams. Large commercial loans are serviced by risk management teams in the markets. Small commercial loans are generally underwritten and serviced centrally in the Business Credit Solutions unit, which is also a part of the Risk Management division. Small commercial real estate loans are underwritten centrally in the Commercial Real Estate Services group. While the Wachovia processes will generally be the default methodologies for the merged company, some changes to the existing processes are currently under evaluation to more smoothly accommodate the SouthTrust business activities.

The company will use Wachovia's credit capital process (M-KMV Portfolio Manager) and credit risk grading methodology as the default models.
