Article distorts market reality

Monday, April 04, 2005

Your March 11 article ("New rate increases spelled out by Verizon") distorted the true nature of Pennsylvania's highly competitive telecommunications marketplace.

Claiming that Verizon's only real competition for the traditional, wireline local telephone service used by millions of people in Pennsylvania is MCI, the reporter failed to acknowledge the robust competition Verizon faces from cable companies, Internet telephony providers, wireless companies and other alternative technologies like instant messaging and e-mail.

Your article's implication that Verizon's acquisition of MCI would limit competition doesn't synch up with the realities of the telecom marketplace. The acquisition is a logical next step in the transformation of the telecom industry and Verizon. This revolution is spurred by new advances in technology, and customers' desire to use it to make their lives and businesses more productive and more efficient. And it would have continued whether or not Verizon decided to acquire MCI.

This deal will result in Verizon becoming a strong global industry leader by strengthening America's premier telecommunications network builder and its leading service provider. It gives Verizon greater ability to lead the telecommunications industry's revitalization through new investment in world-class networks and services. And the ultimate winners will be Pennsylvania's consumers and businesses.
