SAVE GRAFTECH GROUP NOMINATES FULL SLATE OF SEVEN DIRECTORS TO GRAFTECH BOARD

NEW YORK, January 23, 2015 Save GrafTech, an investor group led by Nathan Milikowsky, a holder of over 15 million shares, or over 11.2%, of the common stock of GrafTech International Ltd. (NYSE: GTI), today sent a letter to the GrafTech Board of Directors disclosing that it has submitted a notice to nominate a full slate of seven candidates for election to the Board at the 2015 Annual Meeting.

GrafTech shareholders overwhelmingly supported the Save GrafTech nominees by an average margin greater than three-to-one at the 2014 Annual Meeting, electing the entire slate of three independent director nominees to the Board: Karen Finerman, David Jardini and Nathan Milikowsky.

In the letter, Save GrafTech details the continued strategic and operational missteps that have contributed to the Company's downward spiral and identifies four additional independent director nominees who are qualified to oversee the necessary wholesale restructuring of the Company.

Included below is the full text of the letter to GrafTech's Board of Directors:

GrafTech Board of Directors

c/o Mr. Randy Carson

Chairman

GrafTech International Holdings

12900 Snow Road

Parma, Ohio 44130

Dear Fellow Directors:

As you know, at the 2014 Annual Meeting, David Jardini, Karen Finerman and I – the entire Save GrafTech slate – were elected to the GrafTech Board of Directors by an overwhelming majority of shareholder votes – with a clear mandate to address the strategic, operational and governance issues hurting the company's performance and stock price. We fully expected to work collaboratively and constructively with the four other directors and implement substantial changes to improve operational efficiency, reduce corporate bureaucracy and drive shareholder returns. Unfortunately, our efforts have been met with continued resistance by an entrenched majority that prefers change at a glacial pace rather than expeditiously focusing on the significant operational restructuring required to address the pervasive issues that continue to damage the company.

We are disappointed that since becoming CEO in January 2014, Joel Hawthorne has proved incapable of addressing the serious challenges currently facing GrafTech. During his tenure, management has generally failed to meet its own forecasts, the business has suffered quarterly net losses and GrafTech has written off a $126 million investment in advanced graphite materials all without any true accountability. GrafTech's stock price has declined by over 60 percent in the past year alone while the demand for graphite electrodes has actually increased over that same period. Mr. Hawthorne's failures have been tolerated by a four-person majority of the Board that is unwilling to hold management accountable for the company's continuing underperformance, and has provided stonewalling resistance to the Save GrafTech slate of directors.

Accordingly, I have been left with no reasonable choice but to nominate a full slate of seven directors for election at GrafTech's 2015 Annual Meeting. The four new independent directors I am proposing, along with the three incumbent Save GrafTech directors, have the industry, financial and restructuring expertise to lead a wholesale turnaround of the company over the next few years and, importantly, are willing to make the tough decisions to benefit all shareholders.

If elected, these nominees would take decisive action to install a first-class management team at GrafTech, including replacing Joel Hawthorne immediately with a qualified successor. I am open to discussing potential interim CEO candidates with both my fellow directors and shareholders. So long as the individual chosen has an in-depth knowledge of the steel industry and the experience necessary to restructure GrafTech's operations, it makes no difference if the interim CEO is selected from our slate or from outside the company.

As a significant creditor of GrafTech and GrafTech's largest individual shareholder, I am deeply concerned about the long-term success of the company and will do everything in my power to ensure it succeeds. In that context, I recently sent a letter to the Board stating my willingness to consider a partial refinancing of the $200 million of notes that come due in November, which I own together with my immediate family and individuals with whom I am closely affiliated. My willingness to consummate a refinancing on substantially better terms than otherwise available in the public market would clearly help GrafTech increase shareholder value and improve its financial position.

I would, of course, need to be comfortable with the direction and composition of GrafTech's Board and management team before extending such a substantial investment in the company. After all, the value of my existing investment has deteriorated significantly; when I sold my companies to GrafTech in 2010, its shares were trading at $19.60¹ per share, more than four times the current share price. Despite this attractive refinancing proposal, the four-person majority of the Board has not accepted my overture to date.

The company's downward spiral continues, and it is clear that GrafTech will not regain its prior market share or the trust of its shareholders and customers by continuing down the same path. At this point, it is essential to replace GrafTech's four stonewalling directors with strong independent directors who have a shareholder orientation, deep steel industry and restructuring experience, and a firm commitment to improving GrafTech's operating performance and corporate governance. The individuals I am nominating are among the strongest director candidates GrafTech has ever attracted, and I would be honored to work alongside them on behalf of all GrafTech shareholders. Our goal is a strong GrafTech that can provide the returns shareholders deserve, the service and pricing customers demand and a working environment employees can be proud of.

Sincerely,

Nathan Milikowsky
